A Brief History of Old Newbury: From Settlement to SeparationBy Audrey D. KellerAs Historic New England's Site Manager for the Spencer-Peirce-Little Farm for many years, Bethany has brought the past alive to those of us who have had the pleasure of taking a tour of the Farm with her as our host. I don't know of anyone who has a greater love for our community's past or a greater commitment to its future than Bethany. Now, everyone has a chance to share her wealth of knowledge of Newbury, through her recently published book, "A Brief History of Old Newbury." Enjoy and we look forward to more published work by Bethany Groff.

In the first ten years of its settlement, the town of Newbury witnessed murders, kidnappings, earthquakes and a plague of caterpillars. The century that followed marked by religious conflict, Indian uprisings and public scandal proved no less challenging to the early Puritan community. In 1640, Massachusetts Governor John Winthrop noted, As people increased, so sin abounded. But through the turmoil, Newbury's citizens harnessed the region's abundant natural resources and developed a thriving community. Author Bethany Groff introduces the compelling personalities that shaped the history of Old Newbury up until 1764, when Newburyport received its independence from the mother town. From the scandalous exploits of Dr. Henry Greenland to the courageous and sacrificing acts of founding families like the Emerys, Dummers and Pikes, A Brief History of Old Newbury provides a captivating glimpse into the verve of this early New England town.

About the Author Bethany Groff is the Regional Site Manager for Historic New England's North Shore properties. A native of Newbury going back eight generations, Bethany can trace her roots to Tristan Coffin, one of the earliest settlers of the region. Her personal affiliations include the American Association of Museums, the New England Museum Association, the North of Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau, the Massachusetts Office of Travel and Tourism and the Greater Newburyport Chamber of Commerce.
