education, her marriages one by one in order, meeting Harry etc. Instead it kind of bounced around, gave me a headache and lost my interest. Indiana Harbor born and raised...even met her...the writers..grandfather, back in the day. I'll update when I finish it, someday0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. A Quick Read and Interesting True Crime StoryBy Steven R. ShookJane Simon Ammeson presents the tragic story of the death of Nettie Diamond at the hands of husband, Harry Diamond, in "A Jazz Age Murder in Northwest Indiana." The book is well written, though a bit disorganized at times due to the insertion of newspaper accounts of the crime, trial, and resulting execution of Harry. Individuals with an interest in the true crime genre and/or history of Northwest Indiana will not be disappointed to read this book. The tale puts into practice the saying that "money is the root of all evil."0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. I especially loved to read archaic terms that have long gone out ...By HLThis book once again proves the adage that truth is stranger than fiction. An absolutely fascinating true crime story that is brought alive by excerpts from newspapers and photos of the day. I especially loved to read archaic terms that have long gone out of common usage such as "check raising" and "jail delivery". Great read!

Nettie Herskovitz was wealthy and widowed. Her suitor, Harry Diamond, was a dashing young bootlegger a decade and a half her junior. At first she resisted his advances, but soon the two were married with an infant daughter. Disinterested in a domestic life, Diamond shot Nettie on Valentine's Day 1923 while riding in their Hudson sedan. He tried to pin the crime on the fleeing chauffeur, but Diamond made a mistake. Though mortally wounded, Nettie lived long enough to identify her attacker to police and change her will. The sensational Diamond murder became tabloid fodder--a Roaring Twenties story of roadhouse floozies, illegal booze, orphaned children, trust funds and legal acrobatics.

About the AuthorJane Simon Ammeson is a writer specializing in history. Her work has appeared in national and international magazines and she has written numerous local history books, including Holiday World, Miller Beach and Brown County, published by Arcadia Publishing. She was born and raised in Indiana Harbor and became interested in the story of Nettie and Harry Diamond when she learned that many of the people she knew when growing up had connections to this quintessential Jazz Age story.
