EhhBy lyle evansThought this book would be longer, also a very limited amount of history on these people in the region of Louisiana and Mississippi. Great historical pictures though.

Enslaved Africans and free people of color of Louisiana deserve the title of "Founding Fathers"; just as much as the French, the Spanish, and the Americans. In spite of their subjugated role as slaves, African Americans of Louisiana, and subsequently New Orleans, were contributors to the success of the state and the city far beyond their role within the labor force. Imported into the Louisiana Territory by John Law's Company of the Indies, enslaved

Africans, fed on a pound of corn a day, gave birth to American figures of the 19th and 20th centuries. Mahalia Jackson, Louis Armstrong, Homer Plessy, Marie Laveau, Buddy Bolden, Julies Lion, Alice Dunbar-Nelson, the fighting men of the Louisiana Native Guard, Ernest ldquo;Dutchrdquo; Morial, and many other African Americans contributed to the growth and development of New Orleans. Every African American citizen of New Orleans is intrinsically connected to the cityrsquo;s cultural and political landscape.
