This book is a colorful glimpse of urban backyard food production, from Northern California to British Columbia. The 35 families/individuals featured have different motivations and approaches, but all are innovative and creative in the use of small space. Ms. Eanes photos and text are engaging, entertaining and informative. Through these pages we visit lush gardens, chicken coops, goat pens, bee hives and more. I found the side-bars and resource lists in each chapter to be helpful. Having read this book I feel inspired. As spring arrives here in the Midwest, I am eager to break out the gardening tools and start digging in the dirt. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great book. Many of these farmers have a special lesson or inspiration to share with those who aspire to, or simply appreciate, the urban farm lifestyle. Backyard Roots is a unique project by California-based photographer Lori Eanes that evocatively and intimately explores the lives of 35 urban farmers in Northern California, Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia. In these stories and photos you'll find people like Laura Allen, the Oakland-based cofounder of Greywater Action, a policy and education nonprofit that promotes the use of greywater systems. In Vancouver, aquaponic farmer Jodi Peters sustainably grows and harvests tilapia in sync with her organic vegetable garden. Or meet Jonathan Chen, a young cancer survivor who now manages the Danny Woo Community Gardens in south Seattle, where a group of Southeast Asian immigrants farm in a vibrant mix of cultures. From the elderly to the young, the trendy to the purely functional, here are inspiring stories, ideas on how to make it happen, tips on everything from chicken keeping to community health, and so much more.
